

Invested in Detroit's Future
 DETROIT & JPMORGAN CHASE & CO.

The Americas

Mexico's account of how 43 students disappeared is wrong, new report says

□ □ □ 10

Earn up to a
$500 BONUS
 Capital One 360

Relatives and friends of 43 teachers college students who disappeared last year wait in Mexico City for a group of experts convened by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to present the conclusions of its investigation. (Omar Torres/AFP/Getty Images)

By Joshua Partlow September 6 at 2:41 PM □ Follow @partlowj

GUATEMALA CITY — Nearly a year after 43 Mexican teachers college students disappeared, an examination of the case by outside experts has rejected the government's official narrative of

CLOSE TO SHORE,
 ANYTHING CAN HAPPEN.
 LCS IS READY.
 LCS FREEDOM CLASS

LEARN MORE LOCKHEED MARTIN

events and claims that investigators tortured witnesses and mishandled evidence.

The report, more than 400 pages long, does not shed light on the fate of the students, but it calls into question nearly all the claims by Mexican authorities about how the crime unfolded in the troubled hills of Guerrero state, particularly the assertion that the students were burned to death at the base of a rural trash dump.

The review, conducted over six months with the Mexican government's cooperation by a group of experts convened by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, also proposed a possible new motive: that the students may have inadvertently stolen a bus full of drugs and that corrupt police officers wanted it back.

"This report provides an utterly damning indictment of Mexico's handling of the worst human rights atrocity in recent memory," José Miguel Vivanco, Americas director at Human Rights Watch, said in a statement. "Even with the world watching and with substantial resources at hand, the authorities proved unable or unwilling to conduct a serious investigation."

[\[Outrage in Mexico over missing students broadens into fury at corruption, inequality\]](#)

The Ayotzinapa students' case marked a turning point for the presidency of Enrique Peña Nieto, generating months of street demonstrations and establishing that the drug-war atrocities that his government had hoped to leave in the past remained alive and well. Throughout all the upheaval, the parents of the students rejected the government's version of events and clung to hope that their children were alive.

Mexican Attorney General Arely Gómez González told reporters

Most Read World

1 Pope calls on Europe's Catholics to take in refugees

2 The Arab world's wealthiest nations are doing next to nothing for Syria's refugees

3 An American family saved their son from joining the Islamic State. Now he might go to prison.

4 Germans are obsessed with the U.S. But they'll deny it.

5 The push and pull of China's orbit

Unlimited Access to The Post. Just

The Most Popular All Over

Fast Company
How Giving Up Refined Sugar Changed My Brain

Salon
No GoFundMe for Kim Davis: Crowdfunding puts the brakes on the disturbing on Sunday that the government remains committed to getting to the bottom of the Ayotzinapa case and that the investigation will incorporate the report's findings. She highlighted the areas of convergence between the government's recommendation and the outside report, such as the conclusion that "the municipal police of Iguala and Cocula participated in the commission of these crimes."

"The government of the republic reiterates its commitment to Mexican society, and particularly to the victims' families, to continue working to clear up the facts," she said.

Gómez added that the mandate of the experts' group will be extended to allow them to complete their work.

Since then-Attorney General Jesús Murillo Karam stood before reporters in November with videos of witness testimony, the official story has been that the teachers college students from Ayotzinapa were captured by police in the town of Iguala and handed over to drug cartel assassins, who shot them and burned their bodies in a remote trash dump outside the nearby town of Cocula. More than 100 people have been arrested in the case.

But first Argentine forensic investigators working on behalf of victims' families and now this team of investigators, including former Guatemalan Attorney General Claudia Paz y Paz and

bigots-get-rich-quick trend

The Atlantic
The Coddling of the American Mind

The Most Popular stories around the web

other Latin American lawyers, have discounted key aspects of that theory. The latter conducted their work with the blessing of the Mexican government. They interviewed prisoners, witnesses and government officials, and they brought in experts, including a Peruvian fire expert who studied the Cocula dump, to analyze crime scenes.

Charred remains of one of the students have been identified, but doubts remain about where those remains were found.

In the Cocula dump, “there wasn’t a fire of that magnitude,” Francisco Cox, a Chilean lawyer who worked on the report, said in an interview.

All the people arrested in the case, Cox said, “deny any involvement” and “said that they were tortured.” Some of them have complained to Mexico’s human rights commission.

There were other seeming lapses during the course of the investigation: Clothes of the victims found by authorities had not been examined, and surveillance videos were erased.

Authorities have said that the initial conflict with police came because the students stole buses in Iguala to disrupt a speech by the mayor’s wife, María de los Angeles Pineda. Authorities accused the couple of ordering police to get rid of the students.

Both the mayor and his wife are in jail.

But the experts’ group noted that Pineda’s speech ended an hour and a half before the students arrived in Iguala on the night of Sept 26. Instead, there were signs that the Iguala buses were used to transport heroin into the United States. When the students stole five of them — a rather common occurrence for this college — they may have inadvertently taken one packed with drugs. That could explain the aggressive hunt by police to find the buses and stop them from leaving the city.

washingtonpost.com

© 1996-2015 The Washington Post

Help and Contact Us

Terms of Service

Privacy Policy

Print Products Terms of Sale

Digital Products Terms of Sale

Submissions and Discussion Policy

RSS Terms of Service

Ad Choices

Read more:

Mexican politics in disarray amid case of kidnapped students

Mexico's economy was supposed to soar. It's starting to flop.

Prison break shines spotlight on Mexico's corruption woes

Joshua Partlow is The Post's bureau chief in Mexico. He has served previously as the bureau chief in Kabul and as a correspondent in Brazil and Iraq.

Get the WorldViews Newsletter

Free daily updates delivered just for you.

Share on Facebook

Share on Twitter

10 Comments

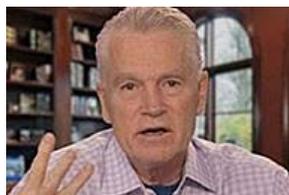

PROMOTED STORIES

Recommended by

Goldman Sachs Fails to Woo This Newly-Minted Millionaire

CNN Money

$5 Bill Proves The Economy Is About To Collapse

The Sovereign Investor

RANKED: The 15 Dumbest US Presidents, Ranked

InsideGov

Your 401k Isn't Growing as Fast as It Should - Here's Why

Mint.com

Cetkovska stuns Wozniacki at US Open

espnW

She cheated for more than 3 years and almost got away with

CBS News

10 | Show Comments

DoMyOwnPestControl.com
the web's most popular pest control store!